WHERE PIGS

In Henderson and Chester County, you'll find that entrepreneurs, corporations, small businesses, industries and farming communities thrive. Take some time to enjoy the newly renovated cabins and grounds of Chickasaw State Park or a variety of tasty options at local coffee houses and restaurants. Known for the legendary Chester County BBQ Festival, our community also is a place where pigs fly. We say that not only as a tribute to our farming industry and the festival, but also because seemingly impossible things happen here.

You also are invited to learn more about local and national history, relax with your family, take a walk for your health or just appreciate peaceful and clean outdoors by spending time at Henderson's Sue Shelton White Park or Gene Record Park or on the downtown walking trail.

Whether you visit for a day or choose to relocate and become a member of our community, it won't take you long to find out why organizations, businesses, schools and people of all ages love calling Chester County home.

leven years ago Donna Butler stood in a field of grass, weeds and red clay dirt, hoping to paint a vision for Arvin Sango executives who were on a site visit in Henderson.

"They said the final thing that won them over was our friendly community," said Butler, a former director of the Henderson/Chester County Chamber of Commerce and current human resources business partner for Arvin Sango.

Since opening in 2011, the Henderson plant has expanded three times, growing from a 32,000-square-foot facility to a more than 100,000-square-foot facility with the completion of a 90,000-square-foot expansion in 2020.

The Henderson plant supplies Toyota and Nissan with emission control systems and specializes in the production of vehicle exhaust systems from the manifold to the tailpipe.

"We have a tight schedule. We receive component pieces, run them one day, and prepare them for shipment to be picked up the same evening or the next morning," Butler said. "We've received numerous awards for our efficiency, and that is because our folks do an excellent job."

Sixty employees work either the day shift (from 6 a.m. until 2:30 p.m.) or the night shift (from 4:30 p.m. until 1 a.m.). Three departments — production, quality and shipping and receiving — work as a team to maintain the Henderson plant's impressive efficiency record.

MEMBERS OF MORNING TEAM

On a fall morning just before the first shift began, employees gathered on the floor for a brief meeting. Wearing green and gold shirts made of a felt-like material and work boots, employees listened to the report from the night shift and then quickly began a series of stretches, finger pulls, arm circles and toe touches to prepare for hours of standing. Shipping and receiving team member Mark Stone led the team through the moves quickly before a shift start bell echoed through the plant.

Henderson resident

Lorenzo Black was among the team members on that fall morning. Black has been on the production team for nearly two years. "On the production line, one of the biggest challenges is diagnosing a machine during a malfunction and not letting it affect our schedule.

"Everyone doing his or her job makes everything easier," Black said. "This is one of the best places to work in Henderson. That's why when some people find out where I work, they get a little jealous."

Once the production team's work was done, Jamie Wiedel, went from line to line inspecting the parts and ensuring everything meets the quality standards.

"My job is to make sure everything falls in place, that the measurements are good and that everything is working on the line," said Wiedel, who has worked at Arvin Sango for seven years.

After Wiedel's inspection, shipping and receiving team member Stone began his work.

"One of my best workdays was nine years ago when we made the first shipment for Toyota," Stone said. "It was exciting to be a part of the first shipment going out the door."

Stone has worked at Arvin Sango since it opened in Henderson. In his role, Stone ensures all shipments are sent on time.

"We're never had a late shipment," Stone said.
"Mistakes don't happen because of the people on the line." Stone considers his position "the best job in the house."

He credits the Henderson's plant success to the commitment to teamwork. "We all know there is no 'I' when we're on the floor," Stone said.

THE BIG PICTURE

Arvin Sango's win as Industry of the Year from the Henderson/Chester County Chamber of Commerce marked the third time the company has been recognized for its contributions to the community.

"In 2009, we were thrilled to win Arvin Sango for the community," Butler said.

Continued growth and expansion for the Henderson plant are in the works for 2021.

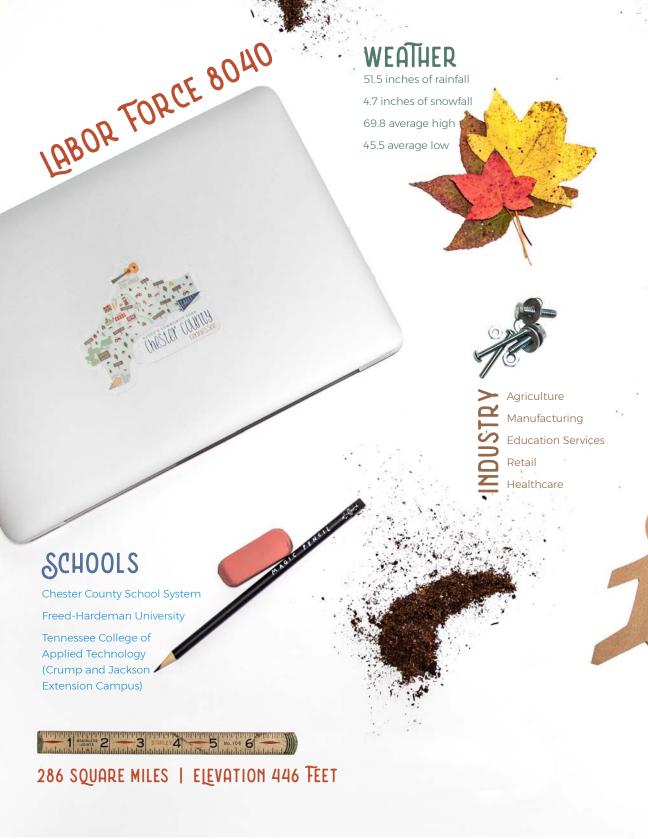

"We're planning a large expansion of our parking lot, offices and cafeteria to accommodate additional hires in 2021," Butler said. "We have new equipment coming from Japan that we have to run trials on to make sure it's running efficiently. We'll have it down to the second for how long a process should take."

The Henderson plant is the largest of all Arvin Sango's satellite facilities. Butler credited the team for its years of success.

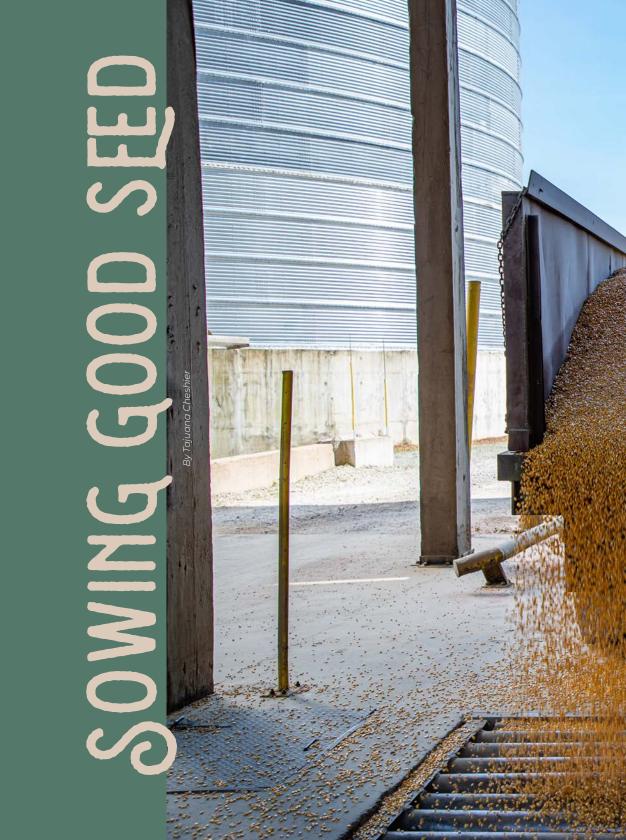

"We're happy to be in Henderson," Butler said.

The business serves farmers who are local and from neighboring counties, including Madison, Hardin, McNairy, Henderson, Hardeman and Decatur.

"My mission is to serve local farmers the best that I can," said Brandon, who earned his Bachelor of Science in concrete industry management and worked for another company before joining his parents at Chester County Grain. "For me, our business is really about how we can help and guide people," he said.

During his childhood, Pickens learned the importance of helping people. Since taking over the family business in 2011, he replaced some of the original equipment in 2013 and added additional grain storage in 2016.

When a farmer's grain arrives on a truck, it is weighed and graded with a probe vacuum to check for moisture and foreign matter in the grain. Grain that is stored at the facility is moved from bin to bin through a conveyor system. "Farming has changed so much. Technology in farming has exploded," Pickens said. "We use software to handle ticket invoices, and we are adding a third set of scales to make our truck traffic flow much faster." Chester County Grain is federally licensed and inspected regularly by the United States Department of Agriculture.

FAMILY LEGACY

When Marvin graduated high school in 1974, he was hired at Gold Kiss, a large grain elevator operation that operated in the same location until 1986. Marvin and Gail later partnered with Dickey and Mary Duke to own the business.

Gail and Mary shared office duties, splitting the number of days they worked each week. "During harvest time, we worked every day, weighing trucks and figuring tickets by hand," Gail Pickens said. "We did not have computers. It took longer and it was a lot harder then. A lot of farmers wanted their tickets split, and we processed their payments. I went full time when we bought out our partners in 2011."

Marvin has slowed down since retiring but still helps out when needed.

When it comes to business operations, the Pickenses have a similar approach to decision making.

"I consider this work a service to the community. The decisions we make affect truck drivers and their families. I'm thinking of those things," Brandon said.

"I always felt that, too," Marvin added. "There are 15 families depending on what you do."

While reflecting about her son's growth in the business, Gail is proud of the leader he has become.

"I never thought that Brandon would take the business over," she said. "I thought he would be hauling the grain instead of running the business."

Seeing Chester County Grain be recognized for excellence in agriculture this year was an exciting moment for the family.

"It was our first time winning an award, and I thought it was awesome, especially for Brandon," Gail said. "I'm proud of Brandon for winning this award," added Marvin.

For Brandon receiving the award was humbling.

"It was a good reminder to stay involved in the community and support other businesses," he said. "God has put us here. He's put my family here to serve this community. If I'm only here for the success of the business, I've completely missed the whole thing."

SERVICE TO THE COMMUNITY.

HISTORIC WALKING TOUR

1. HENDERSON/CHESTER COUNTY CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Although the Chester County Chamber of Commerce calls this building home, it was once the base for 1580 AM. This station was the only radio station that played country music between Memphis and Nashville in the 1960s.

2. CHESTER COUNTY COURTHOUSE

On the National Register of Historic Places, the Chester County Courthouse was built in 1913. It is the third courthouse constructed in the county, since fire destroyed the previous two. Film buffs may recognize the Chester County Courthouse from the 1973 feature film "Walking Tall," which was based on the real life of McNairy County Sheriff Buford Pusser.

3. FHU OLD MAIN ADMINISTRATION BUILDING

Constructed by local craftsmen using local resources in 1907-1908, Old Main is listed on the National Register of Historic Places. FHU founders, A.G. Freed and N.B. Hardeman, assumed financial responsibility for the building's mortgage. Jacks Creek native Hubert T. McGee designed Old Main, the Chester County Courthouse, the Hardeman House and Hall-Roland Hall. In 2019, a $5.5-million restoration project gave Old Main new life.

4. CORNER OF CASON AVE. AND MAIN ST.

After years of playing and singing on the streets of Henderson, street musician Waynell Jones was "discovered" by David Evans, a University of Memphis music professor. In the 1980s, High Water Recording Company recorded two of Jones's songs, "Jaybird Boogie" and "The Chicken Song." In the cover notes, Evans said Jones "played for every kind of audience, black and white, young and old." "The Chicken Song" also is included in an album entitled "Deep South Blues." In 1986 Jones represented Tennessee at the National Folklife Festival. For many years he was a part of the facilities staff at Freed-Hardeman, where he also entertained students.

5. SUE SHELTON WHITE PARK AND EDDY ARNOLD MARKER

Before making her mark on our nation's history, Chester County native Sue Shelton White graduated from Georgie Robertson

Christian College (now FHU) in 1904. She served as Tennessee chair of the National Women's Party, to campaign for women's suffrage. She also edited the organization's newspaper. As a member of NWP, White was imprisoned for burning a paper effigy of President Woodrow Wilson on the White House lawn. She returned to Tennessee to lead the fight for passage of the 19th Amendment. Her work was critical in swaying lawmakers to vote for ratification in 1920, giving the nation's women the right to vote.

A marker honoring Eddy Arnold's legacy is being placed at Sue Shelton White Park. Arnold, born on a farm near Henderson, became known as the "Tennessee Plowboy." Going from the cotton fields of Chester County to the top of the country charts, Arnold became one of the biggest names in the music industry. The most popular country performer of the 20th century, he sold more than 85 million records and spent the most weeks of any artist at the top of the charts. Credited with creating the Nashville Sound, he became the first country artist to successfully crossover to pop music. He was inducted into the Country Music Hall of Fame and was CMA's first Entertainer of the Year.

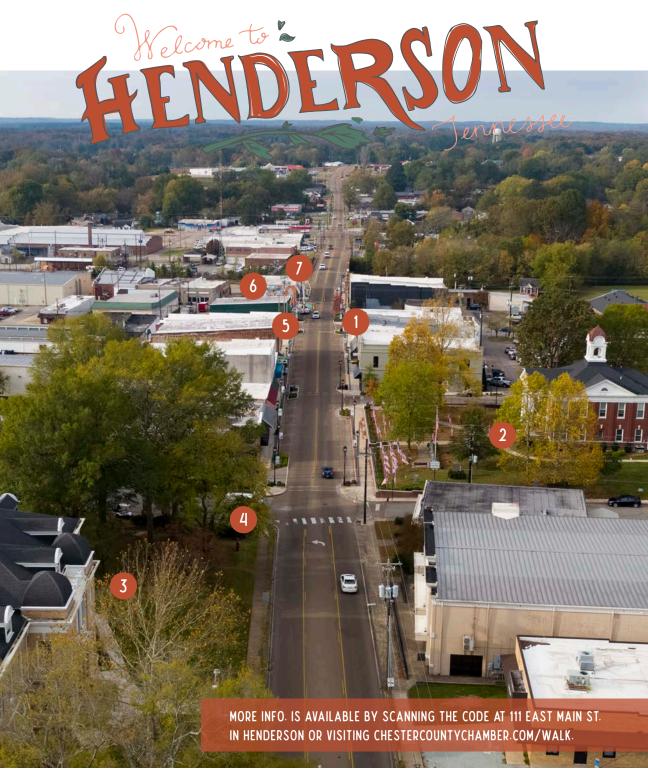

6. DOWNTOWN MURALS

Bramblett Group commissioned artist Loralea Landrum to paint the Chester County and flying pig murals on the agency's building at 117 West Main St. in 2019. They were designed to welcome people downtown and promote the community as a place where seemingly impossible things happen.

7. HISTORIC FRONT STREET

Henderson's first businesses were buildings along Front Street. Its current well-maintained appearance is due to the service, medical and retail storefronts that exist there today. A large parking lot provides ample space for anyone visiting downtown Henderson. A Civil War Marker details history that the street played in housing supplies during the war.

s one of Tennessee's most visited parks,
Chickasaw averages nearly 500,000 visitors annually. To give the park a facelift and upgrade high traffic areas, renovations began in 2017 to replace the bridge over Lake Placid, improve the campgrounds, restore historic cabins and repave its main roads.

"It took a year to rebuild the bridge, and it's one of our main attractions that visitors missed the most," Scott Easley, Chickasaw Park Ranger, said. The new bridge is ADA accessible and allows for small watercraft to pass underneath. Additional improvements include a covered observation platform in the center of the bridge and bumpouts for fishing. Golf and horseback riding continue to be a favorite activity for visitors.

Chickasaw has long offered educational programs for youth to explore nature. Most were canceled in 2020 due to the COVID-19 pandemic, which required state parks to close for several months in the spring and adhere to social distancing guidelines once the parks reopened in June.

When the park reopened, Easley said, it experienced a large spike in guests, with record visitation rates.

"We have not had any openings in our cabins since they reopened," said Easley, who has worked as the park's ranger since 2011.

Two families – the Leaths and the Joneses visited Chickasaw in the fall to enjoy the park's upgrades.

PARK HOPPERS

Making Chickasaw State Park a biannual stop has been a tradition for Jerry and Carliss Leath, of Covington, Tennessee, since they married in 2016.

The West Tennessee retirees have a history at Chickasaw that began before they became a couple. Carliss's childhood memories are filled with trips to Chickasaw with her family, while Jerry served as a park ranger there in the 1970s.

"It's a beautiful park with a lot to offer," Carliss said.
"We play horseshoes and corn hole and enjoy good music and conversations with the people we meet there. When we stay, we're there six or seven nights."

The Leaths purchased their trailer just as the COVID-19 pandemic closed state parks and travel throughout the country.

"We were housebound and bored until May," Carliss said. "When the parks reopened, we hit the road. We're not happy if we're not traveling."

The Leaths spent the last half of spring and all summer breaking in their 25-foot trailer, which provides them with all of the comforts of home. It has a kitchen, sofa, sleeping quarters and a bathroom, as well as an awning for shade when they grill outside.

"We can get to Chickasaw in an hour and a half," Carliss said. "We love to travel with our two Shih Tzus, Thurston and Ebony. We feel that camping is the best life."

The couple makes new friends wherever they travel, including a couple they introduced to Chickasaw's golf course in the fall.

"We're constantly plugging Chickasaw," Carliss said.
"Our friends were very pleased with the park and are planning to return in summer 2021."

While in Henderson, the couple rode their trike into town to visit local restaurants and to see how the area is evolving.

The Leaths are planning to head to Florida for warmer temperatures in the winter, but as soon as spring and summer return, they have their itinerary lined up for traveling other states.

"We're going to visit Kansas City, Missouri; Peoria, Illinois, and Holland, Michigan," Carliss said.
"Whenever the weather warms back up in West Tennessee, we'll come right back to Chickasaw."

FALL BREAK GETAWAY

The Joneses — Bret, Alison and their two daughters, Anniston, 16, and Sheridan, 12 — chose Chickasaw because of its proximity to their home in Jackson, Tennessee, and because they love being outside.

"Seeing all that God has made for us to enjoy breathes new life into you," Alison said.

During their daughters' fall break in October, the family discovered individual ways to enjoy the great outdoors with their dog, Daisy, a 50-pound German Shorthaired Pointer.

For Alison, spending time reading and resting in a hammock was relaxing, while Anniston was happy simply being outside, and Sheridan's highlight was fishing from a canoe on the lake with her dad. Together the family took in a scenic drive to see the fall foliage.

"It was really beautiful, all of the burgundy, gold and orange. We looked up different plants to find out what they were," Alison said.

The family hiked around the lake, pitched a tent and camped for two nights.

"The facilities were nice and clean, and visitors were wearing masks going into and out of the bathrooms," Alison said.

When they did not prepare their own meals, the Joneses visited some of Henderson's local restaurants.

"We always try to eat in local places whenever we're traveling," Alison said.

The family usually visits Chickasaw at least once a year and other state parks with lakes or other bodies of water.

"Camping is friendly. You can say 'hi' and talk to people at a safe distance," Alison said.

CHANGING SEASONS AT CHICKASAW

As numbers of tent and RV campers slow during the winter months, Chickasaw has a mid-December draw that brings in socially distanced crowds. The Lighting of the Park is a beloved tradition.

"We've had a lot of positive feedback about the cabins and the campgrounds," he said. "Visitors can fit any size camper that they want to now. They've been a huge success."

Easley is hopeful families will be able to participate in children's programming in the spring, summer and fall of 2021.

"They'll be able to learn a lot about the outdoors and see what we have to offer," Easley said. "They will leave with more respect for the outdoors."

LEAP OF FAITH

By Tajuana Cheshier

e're either really busy or really, really busy."

Oliver's Screen Printing and Embroidery is in the midst of an expansion — one that husband and wife business owners Jeremy and Tanya Oliver call a blessing.

"We took a leap of faith to move and expand," Tanya said. "God has always taken care of us because opportunities always seem to come our way."

In 2013, the couple had an agreement with the owner of then Henderson Trophy Shop to manage the business. The arrangement lasted one year before the couple took over the business.

The couple put in many nights and weekends in the early years of operation.

"We started with one employee," Jeremy said. "And we experienced a lot of growing pains and doubts," Tanya said.

Tanya learned how to operate an embroidery machine. "There was a lot of trial and error, but practice makes perfect," she said.

Jeremy's IT background helped supplement the couple's income, while he also used his knowledge to research and purchase new equipment. Now the business not only offers screen printing and embroidery, but also a variety of personalized awards, trophies and engraving services.

The couple has a funny description of how they work so well together.

"The way I say it is that he's the owner, and I'm the boss," Tanya explained with a chuckle.

THE BIG MOVE. NAME CHANGE

In July 2018 the Olivers moved from 417 E. Main St. to 651 E. Main St., where they had more space and inherited nine tanning beds as part of the business. (The tanning beds have since left the shop.) At the new location, the couple changed the name of the business to Oliver's Screen Printing & Embroidery to reflect the family ownership and connection to Jeremy's mother, Joy Oliver, who worked for Chester County Schools. They hired four additional employees, and business began to pick up, as well.

"Everything changed for us when we moved," Jeremy said.

"Our busy seasons are spring and the end of the school year. We have several jobs come in from Dixie Youth, summer camp T-shirts, athletic apparel for Freed-Hardeman University and school shirts," Tanya said. The couple enjoys seeing their work when they are out in the community.

"We want to be the best at what we do," Tanya said.
"Since we are a tight-knit community, we look for opportunities to fulfill a need."

Their vision for the business is to offer variety and quality service.

"I want us to be a onestop shop for someone to get everything done here," said Jeremy, who is currently eyeing upgrading to an automatic screen printing machine. Her morning task is to complete a job of 122 sweatshirts with a two-color logo on the front. Heath matches the colors required and spreads the ink on two of the six-screen print carousels.

As she works, Heath

As she works, Heath makes sure the sweatshirt is smooth before she lowers the screen press down. She presses the first color layer into the sweatshirt with a hard forward stroke of her squeegee.

"I want the first color to really bond to the fabric," Heath explained. But with the second, top-layer ink color, Heath does not press quite as hard.

PANDEMIC PRESSURE

Like many businesses, Oliver's adapted to the COVID-19 pandemic restrictions and quarantine and even fulfilled two of their largest jobs to date.

Fueled by the pressure to keep the business thriving, they responded quickly.

"We had to figure out other shopping options, so we used social media to sell and advertise our services," Tanya said. Oliver's offered curbside service for customers who needed to pick up their orders. Those decisions made it possible for the business to keep all of its employees without any layoffs.

"We have to be successful," Jeremy said. "We're responsible for all employees because this is their livelihood."

Their longest serving employee, Jessica Heath, specializes in screen printing. She has 14 years of experience mixing colors and getting the job just right.

"Jessica is a gem," Tanya said.

PRACTICE MAKES PERFECT

"You can't be afraid to get your hands dirty, get a little sweaty and do whatever it takes to get everything done," said Heath, as she fit a sweatshirt onto a form. It's an art form to make a screen print T-shirt or sweatshirt look just right, she said.

"It takes a lot of practice to get used to moving your arms (a certain way) at the same time," Heath said. "But it's a natural thing for me now. It's second nature."

BUSINESS OF THE YEAR

Winning the award for business of the year meant so much to the Olivers.

"It felt good to be recognized by the community," Jeremy said.

Their nomination form read in part, "Oliver's, LLC has grown every year since its inception and has gone from just the owners to six full-time and part-time employees. Oliver's is an excellent example of a small business involved in promoting the community. Oliver's is also a strong supporter of the Chester County and Freed-Hardeman University athletic programs."

"We're thankful for the business. If the community didn't support us, we wouldn't be here," Tanya said.

s a child, Dr. Adam Phelps' life was changed by seeing the chalkboard clearly for the first time after a visit to his optometrist. He knew then that he wanted to help people the same way the doctor had helped him.

After graduating from Freed-Hardeman University in 2005 and the Southern College of Optometry in 2009, Phelps worked at a practice in Crossville for five years before he purchased Dr. Larry Bloomingburg's Henderson optometry practice in 2018. Bloomingburg owned the practice for 43 years.

From the shiplap on the walls to new flooring and lighting, Phelps did much of the remodeling work with some help from a few friends. The project took about two months to complete before he reopened as Phelps Eye Care in January 2019.

"I wanted it to feel homey but also to look sophisticated," said Phelps, who has two employees in the practice.

When patients meet Phelps, they may notice he is not wearing a white coat. That is intentional.

"Some people have white coat anxiety, so when they meet me, I'm just me," Phelps said.

His mission is to use the latest technological advancements in eye care equipment to provide the best possible treatment for his patients.

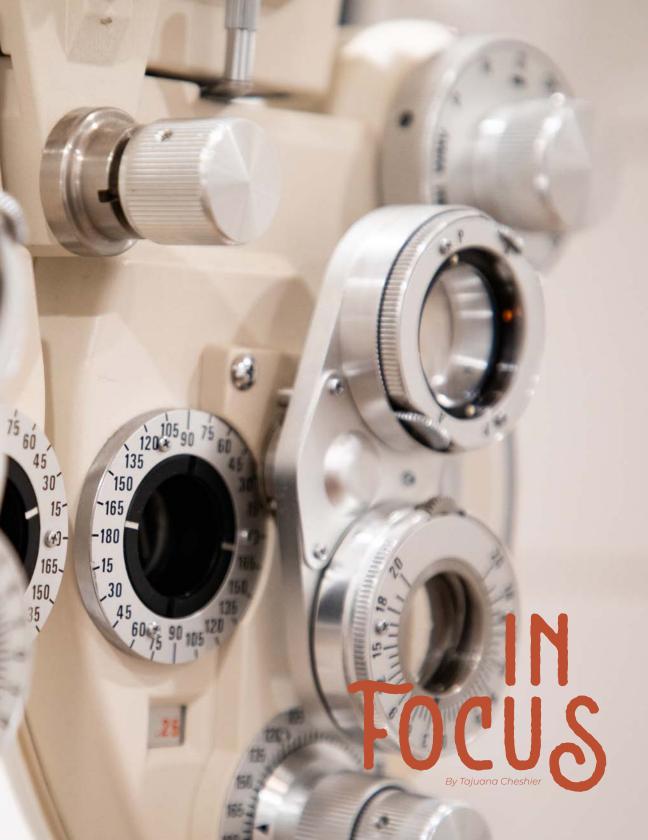

Phelps typically sees 14 patients in a day. Some travel from Selmer, Bethel Springs and Linden.

"Dr. Bloomingburg had an established practice with 3,000 patients, and I've been received by them with open arms," Phelps said. "I feel fortunate that patients are satisfied with my level of care."

Phelps is experienced in treating many ocular diseases, including macular degeneration, glaucoma, dry eye disease, emergency care and other services such as contact lens fitting and comanagement of surgical needs.

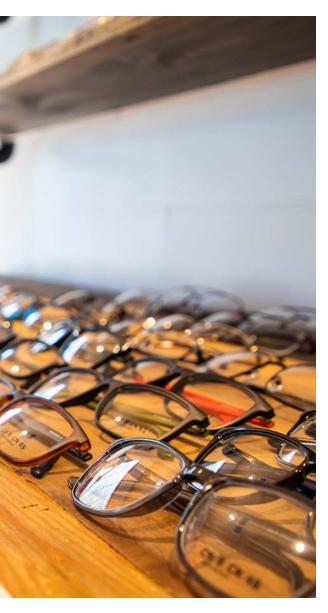

Phelps has invested in advanced equipment in his practice. He uses OCT, or optical coherence tomography, which provides a CT scan of the retina, the Optos retinal camera to take images of the retina and eliminates the need to dilate most patients and AdaptDx to measure how well patients' eyes adjust from bright light to darkness.

Phelps says the advanced testing equipment provides eye care that helps with many aspects of health including monitoring diabetes, which can drastically affect eye health.

"Optometrists are the gatekeepers of eye care, while ophthalmologists perform eye surgeries," Phelps explained. "With our increased screen time, we see more and more patients with computer related vision strain. More children are nearsighted, which is why annual eye exams are important to make sure everything is working properly."

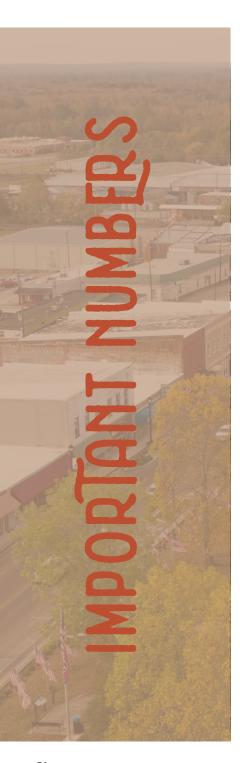

The new business had to adapt to the COVID-19 pandemic by shutting down for six weeks. "We made sure patients had adjustments to their glasses or received their contacts," Phelps said.

When Phelps Eye Care received the Emerging Business of the Year award for providing state-of-the-art eye care and community service, Phelps appreciated the recognition.

"I have worked hard to make it a nice clinic that is technologically advanced and offers quality care to the community," Phelps said. "It is not just about getting glasses. I am trying to stay on the cutting edge of eye care."

Phelps and his wife, Jessica, who is a veterinarian, love Henderson and caring for others.

"I treat every person who comes in here like family," Phelps said. "God blessed me to be able to do what I wanted to do and we always want people to feel welcome at Phelps Eye Care."
